

HOW TO MAKE A SPORE PRINT

Determining Spore Color is Essential for Positively Identifying a Species

Spores are the reproductive structures of all mushrooms and can be any color, including white, cream, yellow, green, purple, brown, rust or black. They are produced by the gills and released from them by the millions at maturity. They are then blown away to settle in a new location and begin the cycle anew.

Designed by Christine Elder

< Learn more about mushrooms